Bldg. 110, Rm. 301

In an age of distraction and artificial intelligence, we need to look at learning consistently through the lens of meaningful and relevant practices. Merely "eliminating" distractions will not solve our engagement problem. If we want to teach the whole person, we'll have to do so in ways that tap into their interests and needs. This is where A.I. can support our work. In this keynote, we'll look at new research from the last three years and practical strategies to support a meaningful and relevant focus like never before.

Having gathered insights from the faculty, we're now eager to hear from the students. In this science fair-style event, students are invited to demonstrate how they are using AI in their studies. Please stop by any time during the two-day event to see the various presentations.
